

ISO 14001 – Environmental Management Systems Certification

ISO 14001 is a worldwide standard for Environmental Management Systems. Audits ISO 14001 considers both environmental management systems and environment-related operation for organizations that wish to improve their environmental performance.

Certification according to ISO 14001 includes requirements such as obligation to undertake an environmental review, to make use of the best technology available and to present the environmental management of the organization to the relevant stakeholders and interested parties. The objective is to achieve continual improvement over and above legal environmental requirements.

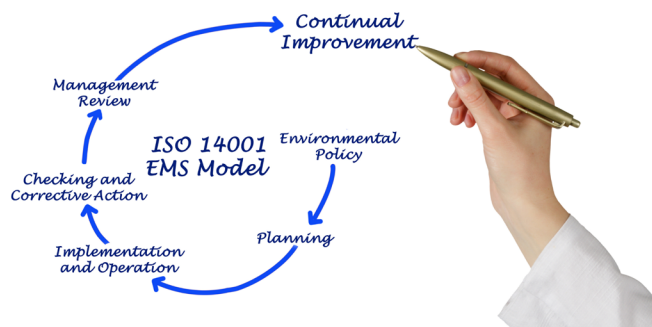

Certification according to ISO 14001 in principle can be used by any organization. Decisive factors are sectors, sales market and objectives in the area of public relations.

Amongst other aspects, certification according to ISO 14001 takes the following into consideration:

- Environmental policy, objectives and programmes
- Continual improvement of environmental performance
- Audit of the Environmental Management Systems
- Adherence to environmental legislation/legal conformity
- Registration with the relevant statutory & regulatory authorities

Benefits of certification:

- Voluntary obligation to actively operate an environmental management system means that the non-calculable risks are avoided and entrepreneurial opportunities open up benefits which are worthwhile in many ways:
- Cost saving through continual improvement of operational/active environmental protection
- Optimal saving of resources (e.g. Energy, Water)
- Timely implementation of environmental protection measures
- Increased visibility on status for legal compliance and demonstrability with regard to measures designed to create trust in relation to customers, official authorities, insurance companies and the general public
- Fulfilment of customer requirements as regards environmental friendliness (prerequisite for approval as supplier)
- Image enhancement as an environmentally-aware organization
- Effective Management, and where possible, reduction of environmental risks
